FEATURED SANCTUARY ANIMAL: ELLA

Ella Fitzgerald may be a jazz singer when she grows up

Late on the night of November 2nd, when Ella was just a day old and still had her umbilical cord, she was deposited in the “cat drop” at the humane society. Fortunately, even without the warmth and milk of her mother, she survived until morning. It’s likely that Ella’s mother was killed by hunters. Initially, Ella was cared for around-the-clock by Maui Humane Society’s Corinne Bourgoin, before being brought to Leilani Farm Sanctuary a couple days later. At the Sanctuary, Ella drinks milk-replacer from a baby bottle and is now learning how to graze. She is still too young to follow the herd of adult goats to the big pasture during the day, but she enjoys sleeping with them in their cozy goat barn at night. When she wants a bottle of warm milk, she vocalizes loudly, reminiscent of singer Ella Fitzgerald.
